Guide us to Thy Perfect Light

God of Wonder
God of Light
God is with us here tonight...

I hope the night sky was clear and you were able to spare a moment to gaze in wonder and awe at the alignment of Jupiter and Saturn in the early evening westward sky this week. Just before I entered the chaos of the corona crazy hospital, I did take a moment to look to the heavens and see this beauty. In that moment, I couldn't help but realize once again how teeny tiny I am and how big the solar system is, let alone the universe and the cosmos.

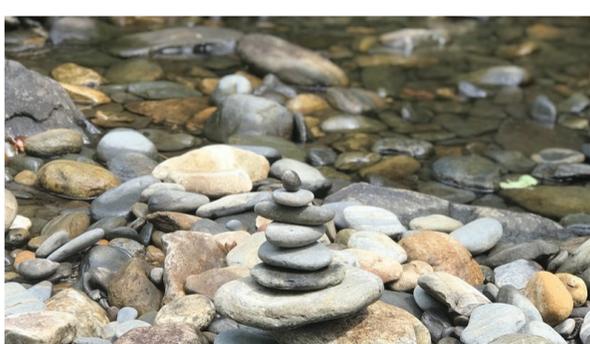

There is something to moments of alignment. The moment two people begin to fall in love. The moment a newborn baby's gaze aligns with their parents. The moment of true forgiveness. The moment a scientific discovery is made. There is a royal brightness in each of these everyday moments. For me they are the truest gifts. Gifts that so often I am too busy to truly receive.

We have all had a great deal of disappointment and despair in our lives this year. It seems like almost everyday someone I know has lost a loved one, and not just from the virus. Only weeks after things seemed to stabilize, we are now losing 3000 to 4000 Americans daily to the virus. Something so small has reeked such devastation upon our earth and ordinary lives.

Perhaps, it is important as much as we want to celebrate this season in the usual way, to remember that there is a season for everything. Perhaps this season of Christmas we are called to have more sacred moments with ourselves and our loved ones, receiving the gifts of wonder and awe, knowing whatever we believe that we will be guided toward the perfect light.

May your Holiday Season and New Year be filled with little moments of alignment that bring wonder, awe and divine love into your life.

Love always,
Dr. Dawn
